It is with great pleasure that we bring you our latest guide: Trade Associations For Sellers of Art, Vintage and Antiques.

Being part of an association offers dealers a platform rooted in tradition and historical principles. Merchants as far back as the 11th century recognized the importance of the collective strength that a guild brings.

Today's trade associations serve as a cohesive force for dealers, providing support, fostering collaboration, and advocating for favorable conditions.

We partnered with CINOA, the International Confederation of Art and Antique Dealers' Associations, to bring you an overview and introduction to their esteemed and highly-vetted member associations

May this guide help you find the most fruitful and inspiring collaboration for your business.

With joy,
Stacey Tiveron
Founder & CEO

At Ronati, we're inspired every day by the power that connection and collaboration bring. Our simple technology tools, built for the industry, reflect that.

Chairman's Address

The tragedy of the War in Ukraine is of great concern to us. Ukraine is a country of rich history, with antiquities dating from the Neolithic to the Byzantine era. Although traditionally our members do not often deal with artefacts from the Ukraine region, they are now on alert, in case they would be approached with items that originate from there, as already obliged by our due diligence guidelines. Our internal network will offer further safeguards. We all wish this tragedy to be over soon.

As Chairman of IADAA I would like to welcome you to our website.

Our organisation, established in 1993, represents the top international dealers in Classical, Egyptian and Near Eastern ancient art. Our prime function is to facilitate good relations between the trade and museums, collectors, archaeologists and government agencies. We work with law enforcement and others to prevent crime and campaign vigorously for an open, legitimate trade operating under fair regulations. We firmly believe that the preservation of the relics of man's ancient past is the responsibility of all.
